THE BISHOP'S CORNER

My Dear Fellow-Catholics,

The Church in France is more and more affected by the consequences of the lack of vocations. In recent months three centers for future French priests have been closed: seminaries in Lille and Bordeaux and the Institute for Theological Studies in Brussels. The seminary of the military diocese has also suspended its activity. A seminary in Strasbourg is being prepared for closure. Since 2000, the number of diocesan newly ordained priests has decreased from 142 to 86.

The main French Catholic weekly, Famille Chrétienne, dedicated its last issue to this topic. It remembers the desolations that took place in seminary formation in the 70's and 80's of the 20th century; about the penetration of ideologies that were born in 1968. In order to be free of them, some alumni fled to the French seminary in Rome. "To understand the sudden decline in the number of vocations," says the professor of theology in one of the main seminaries in France, one must resort to actual reasons. In all spheres of the Church's life, we have gone through these post-Conciliar years from theocentrism to anthropocentrism. In this way, the ecosystem in which vocations may be born is destroyed." As the same seminary formator points out, today almost all vocations come from those environments that have opposed this destructive current and have placed their focus on the primacy of God. This is about families, schools, and scouting teams.

Those who discern to be called prefer centers where the emphasis is placed on intense prayer life and the intellectual formation is orthodox. Rector of the Seminary in Toulon, which currently has 75 seminarians, emphasizes that the intellectual formation proposed here is "classic, faithful to the Magisterium of the Church, rooted in the Scriptures, the Church Fathers and the writings of St. Thomas Aquinas. However, we educate pastors, not scholars" - adds Fr. Dol, "to accurately proclaim the Gospel". Seminarians learn the different methods of the new evangelization, first as participants and then as animators.

Seminaries with the largest number of seminarians also try to respond to the needs of dioceses that do not have vocations. However, priests are not sent one at a time, but as a community of several priests, who by praying and supporting one another, undertake the ministry.

Have a lovely Sunday and a calm week! Bishop Wes
